

HOW MEN MUST DRESS.

THE MATERIAL AND THE SHAPING OF THE CLOTH OF 1890.

Cuts of Coats Wherewith Gentlemen May Feel Abreast of the Year's Fashion—Wide Waist Worsteds and Soft Finish to Rule the Modes of Good Dressing the Current Season.

HE question as to how a man shall dress himself is easier asked than answered. There are certain canons of taste which override all fashions, and to these he must appeal who would be really and truly a well-dressed man. A Chicago Times reporter recently visited a number of the arbiters of taste and material in the World's Fair city, and out of their wisdom the following facts were evolved:

In the first place men's clothes, as a whole, if they are to be really chic, will show the softest possible finish, coats will display low openings and ample sleeves, vests will follow this form, and trousers will sit moderately close to the leg as to the upper works, and will exhibit a moderate spring at the bottom.

In overcoats the Chesterfield or fly-front oversack will be much more worn than any other style. It will be made from worsteds and almost all styles of soft overcoatings, and will be of medium length, thirty-six to thirty-seven inches, being the limits for a man of average height, 5 feet 8 inches.

The overcoat, made of covert overcoating, modified for street wear, will be quite popular with many who have no very profound regard for the eternal fitness of things.

For day and half dress the double-breasted frock is the most appropriate, as it is the most elegant style of coat made. For day dress it will have lapels of ample width, well peaked, and silk-faced to the button-holes, of which there will be five on each side. It will roll when closed to the third hole, but when unbuttoned will roll free. The lengths for a man of average height will be eighteen and one-half inches to the hip buttons and thirty-six inches to the bottom of skirts. It will be made of worsteds and chevots.

The three-button cutaway frock will be, as for several seasons, more popular than the four, two, or one buttoner. The lengths will average eighteen and one-half to thirty-three inches, the roll will be moderately long, and the fronts will be cut away so as to show one button of the vest. The four-buttoner will close higher on the chest and button a trifle lower, while the portionately, than for a regular form, but should have the same appearance of looseness. In the double-breasted frock coat shown in the next cut it is claimed that for half dress there is nothing more suitable, effective, or appropriate than the suit shown in this figure. The material represented for the coat and vest is a fancy diagonal worsted and for the trousers a very handsome, subdued, striped trousering. The collar of the coat is cut rather long to a low gorge and the lapels are well peaked and spaced for five holes, to button four if desired. The silk extends to the end of holes and the edges are flat braided. The sleeves are shapely and are finished to imitate cuffs closed with two buttons. The trousers for this and all other half-dress suits average nineteen inches at knee and seventeen and one-half to eighteen at the bottom. They have a slight spring.

The next illustration shows a low-roll sack suit the material of which is a striped chevot. The collars and lapels are one and one-half inches wide and the fronts are cut with quite a curve from top to lower button. They are finished soft. The trousers with this suit average nineteen and one-half inches at the knee and eighteen at the bottom, and the side-seams are finished with a welt.

In the figure represented following this the overcoat is a soft diagonal chevot, the coat and vest a medium wale worsted, and the pantaloons a striped trousering.

The overcoat is an accurate representation of a light-weight overcoat for the current season, thrown open.

"Father," exclaimed young Jenkins, entering the old gentleman's office, "I have sold my newspaper office."

"Sit down, Tom. I am glad to see that you are so sensible."

"Yes, father, I have sold my office, but I have bought another one."

than the other styles. It has quite a number of good points to recommend it. It can be worn without an overcoat, it is very dressy when silk-faced, and it is very becoming to a good figure.

So much for the general effect to be produced by the new year's clothes. Now for the special and particular details out of which these results are to be achieved.

LOW-ROLL SACK SUIT.

The first cut shows the covert coat. The material represented is a covert overcoating. The length for a man of average height, five feet eight inches, is thirty-four inches. The back is cut whole, with nearly straight side-seams that are finished with vents, and the form, though its shape is suggested, is fitted loosely. The collar and lapels are light, the roll averages four and a half inches in length, and the edges are double-stitched moderately wide. The pockets have flaps to go in or out, and the sleeves, which are cut half and half, are finished with three rows of stitching around the bottom. The seams are lapped and stitched to match the edges.

In the next cut is exhibited one of those new one-button cutaway suits, which are designed especially for persons of a rather corpulent build. The material is a wide wool worsted and a striped trousering. The roll of the coat is about six inches deep.

The fronts are cut away from the closing button with a gentle curve, and are well rounded from midway of skirt to the bottom. The edges are bound, or flat-braided narrow, and the sleeves are finished with imitation cuffs, closed with two buttons.

The vest extends about one and a half inches below the waist seam of the coat, closes with five buttons, and has a notched collar.

The trousers are more shapely, proportionately, than for a regular form, but should have the same appearance of looseness.

A LIGHT-WEIGHT OVERCOAT.

In the double-breasted frock coat shown in the next cut it is claimed that for half dress there is nothing more suitable, effective, or appropriate than the suit shown in this figure.

The material represented for the coat and vest is a fancy diagonal worsted and for the trousers a very handsome, subdued, striped trousering. The collar of the coat is cut rather long to a low gorge and the lapels are well peaked and spaced for five holes, to button four if desired. The silk extends to the end of holes and the edges are flat braided. The sleeves are shapely and are finished to imitate cuffs closed with two buttons. The trousers for this and all other half-dress suits average nineteen inches at knee and seventeen and one-half to eighteen at the bottom. They have a slight spring.

The next illustration shows a low-roll sack suit the material of which is a striped chevot. The collars and lapels are one and one-half inches wide and the fronts are cut with quite a curve from top to lower button. They are finished soft. The trousers with this suit average nineteen and one-half inches at the knee and eighteen at the bottom, and the side-seams are finished with a welt.

In the figure represented following this the overcoat is a soft diagonal chevot, the coat and vest a medium wale worsted, and the pantaloons a striped trousering.

WHEN ONE FALLS OVERBOARD.

It Strikes Terror to the Hearts of the Bravest of Men.

HERE is no sound aboard ship so demoralizing as that of "Man overboard!" It strikes terror to the heart of the bravest of men, and only the best disciplined crews can withstand the panic it usually produces. Almost every ship has a particular rule of action for such occurrences. The best preconcerted arrangements, however, are often inapplicable, and success depends mainly on the presence of mind of the watch, the man at the life buoy, and the normal condition of the boats.

A cool hand will drop the life buoy sometimes within reach of a man; a "bothered" one will either not let go at all or do so before the man has got near the stern. Of all persons aboard ship, the officer of the deck should be cool and collected.

Rear Admiral S. B. Luce lays down the principle that the most important considerations when a man falls overboard are: First, the quickest and most effective method of arresting the ship's progress and how to keep her as near the spot where the man fell as possible. Second, to preserve the general discipline of the ship, to maintain silence and to enforce the most prompt obedience, without permitting foolhardy volunteering of any kind. Third, to see that the boat appointed to be employed on these occasions is placed in such a manner that she may be cast loose in a moment, and when ready for lowering that she is properly manned and fitted, so as to be efficient in all respects when she reaches the water. Fourth, to take care in lowering the boat neither to stove or swamp her nor to pitch the men out. And, lastly, to have a sufficient number of the sharpest-sighted men in the ship stationed aloft in such a manner as to give them the best chance not only of discovering the person overboard, but of pointing him out to the men in the boat, who may not otherwise know in what direction to pull.

With steamers the difficulties to overcome in rescuing a man overboard are comparatively few, inasmuch as a steam-vessel is always under control so long as her machinery is in good order. The rule is to stop as quickly as possible, lower the life-boat, and pick the man up. The really fine points of seamanship come into play when sailing ships are being handled. The ordeal is a trying one for the best of officers, and the young seamen who can properly place a large sailing ship and rescue a man that has fallen overboard deserve the highest credit for seamanship qualities.

Two Hundred Women Killed.

A letter from Zanzibar says that over a year ago a caravan of 300 Arabs left the East Coast to go into the interior to trade. They have now returned, and one of the chiefs relates their adventures. Arriving at Kivirondo, on the northeast shores of Victoria Nyanza, the Arabs saw that the natives had a good deal of ivory and that they had no guns. They attacked the tribe, and before the shooting had gone on long the natives were willing to do anything to make peace.

After a long palaver with the chiefs the Arabs agreed to leave the country upon the payment to them of two hundred tusks of ivory and two hundred young women. The natives were glad to get rid of the enemy even on these hard conditions. As soon as they recovered the ivory and the women the Arabs started for the coast. They had a terrible time in the Masai country. There was a drought, and they almost perished of thirst. Then provisions became scarcer and scarcer, and the whole party was in danger of starvation. Finally the Arab chiefs decided that, in order to save themselves and their ivory, it would be necessary to sacrifice their female slaves, who were very weak from their deprivations and could march no further.

That night all of these two hundred young women were shot to death and their bodies were left in the camp for beasts of prey. The victims happily had not a moment's warning of their impending fate. Each murderer selected his intended victim, and the horrible crime was accomplished so speedily that few of the women made any outcry. With their force thus summarily reduced the Arabs were able to pull through the desert region, obtaining little more food than barely enough to sustain life.

The chief who related these facts in Zanzibar showed no compunctions whatever for the terrible crime in which he had assisted, but mentioned the massacre only to give an idea of the great loss they had sustained by the necessary sacrifice of the two hundred slaves. It is a curious fact that some of the murderers were troubled in mind because their necessities had compelled them to eat rats and other unclean food, which is prohibited to Mohammedans on the march.—Review Française.

Kind-Hearted.

Mrs. Simkins has just heard that her husband has been drawn to serve on a jury.

"John Simkins on the criminal jury!" exclaimed Mrs. Simkins. "Well, all I can say is that I congratulate the criminals."

"Why, Mrs. Simkins? Is your husband a very merciful man?"

"Merciful! Why, John Simkins wouldn't hang a picture, much less a dog, unless he was just made to!"—Youth's Companion.

Too Strong to Work.

First tramp (watching men and women coming from the mill)—Pretty sickly looking crowd, ain't they, Bill?

Second tramp—They are, pard. A person once told me that work was healthy, but I don't believe him. We're as fat as I ever seen, ain't we?—Boston Herald.

Making a Fair Day.

It is related that once when President of the Fairfield County (Connecticut) Agricultural Society Barnum found that the annual exhibition was barely paying expenses, an old farmer in the crowd had his pocket picked. The thief was soon found, arrested, handcuffed, and put on exhibition in the big tent, and this feature being widely advertised, such crowds came that the treasury was overflowing.

The Doctor Who Succeeds.

A physician who understands human nature, who plays with the baby, makes friends with the children, and listens to the woes of a good wife and mother, says a medical journal, is the fellow to whom the master of the house most cheerfully pays the largest bills. It is not the medicine-bottled up, but it is the comfort and consolation that are unbottled that make the broad line between an unsuccessful and a popular physician.

"German Syrup"

A Cough For children a medicine should be absolutely reliable. A mother must be able to pin her faith to it as to her Bible. It must contain nothing violent, uncertain, or dangerous. It must be standard in material and manufacture. It must be plain and simple to administer; easy and pleasant to take. The child must like it. It must be prompt in action, giving immediate relief, as children's troubles come quick, grow fast, and end fatally or otherwise in a very short time. It must not only relieve quick but bring them around quick, as children chafe and fret and spoil their constitutions under long confinement. It must do its work in moderate doses. A large quantity of medicine in a child is not desirable. It must not interfere with the child's spirits, appetite or general health. These things suit old as well as young folks, and make Boschee's German Syrup the favorite family medicine.

Concluded Not to Die.

A few days ago the friends of a prominent society woman were startled by a report that she was dangerously ill, says the Louisville Commercial. The "Town Talker," in speaking of her to a particular friend of the lady, brought out the cause of her illness. She is allowed by her husband so much a month for dresses. During the last social season she bought so many handsome ball costumes that her allowance only seemed a drop in the bucket toward paying for them. Her costumes attracted so much attention that her vanity was excited and she endeavored with each succeeding dress to surpass the last. This she succeeded in doing. Every action must have a corresponding reaction. Her pleasure, caused by being the best-dressed woman in Louisville, has given place to her sorrow, caused by her having the largest millinery bills of any woman in Louisville. The bills were sent to her amounting to $2,200. She immediately retired to her bed. Doctors were sent for, but for a week she continued to grow worse. Her husband became alarmed and told her if she would just get well he would do anything for her. She said she could not. At last in despair she told him if he would just pay her bill and forgive her she would try and get well. He promised. He paid the bill. From that moment she began to recuperate, and in a few days was almost entirely well. She then confessed to her husband, who forgave her. She has promised to live within her allowance, which he has increased. So they are happy again.
